HATALOM

It costs one thousand dollars to own the Rolex Day-Date, the watch you see so often on the wrists of presidents everywhere. We believe the Day-Date is the largest gold wrist chronometer made by anyone.

The case is carved out of a solid block of 18kt. yellow gold. That's the only way to make it strong enough, without seams to protect to our satisfaction the 30 jewel chronometric movement.

Day of the week and date of the month change automatically at the stroke of midnight.

Like all Rolex Oyster Perpetuals, the Day-Date is self-winding, waterproof, and built to live a tough life. It's shown here with an authentic "President" 18kt. gold band.

Other Rolex chronometers start as low as $175 at fine jewelers everywhere.

Men who guide the destinies of the world wear Rolex watches

You know their names as you know your own. You know their faces from a thousand newspaper and magazine articles. You have seen them and heard their voices on newscasts and on your television screen. Their actions and decisions influence the pattern of our lives. We cannot mention their names, nor show pictures of them. It would not be fitting to do so, for they include royalty, the heads of states, great service commanders. But we invite you to look carefully at the next pictures that you see of them, at their wrists as well as their faces and clothes. You will notice that in almost every case they wear a wrist-watch. That watch will most likely have been made by Rolex of Geneva. We are proud of the service given by Rolex watches to so many eminent men throughout the world. It is scarcely necessary to point out that the performance of these watches is, in the highest degree, accurate and dependable.

A ROLEX WILL NEVER CHANGE THE WORLD. WE LEAVE THAT TO THE PEOPLE WHO WEAR THEM.

There are people who believe that the world moves forward on the back of inspiration and ideas. For them, a day is more than 24 hours. A day is an opportunity to make something happen - to make a positive difference. They are the people who believe that making a contribution matters. And they find it impossible to go about their lives any other way. These are the same people you'll often find wearing a Rolex. Not because they have to. Because it's who they are.

We invented the Submariner to work perfectly
660 feet under the sea.
It seems to work pretty well at any level.

The Rolex Submariner is a salty watch. It's the official watch for divers of the Royal Navy. That beefed-up Oyster case resists pressures down to 660 feet. You'll find it in the cockpits of most ocean racers as hard-driving skippers beat down to Bermuda, Hobart and the Fastnet Rock. How come it's seen so much where the wettest thing around is a dry Martini? Who knows. Maybe it's because the black dial goes so well with a black tie. Ask her. Maybe she knows.

Begin your own tradition.

"Of course, the acoustics of all minute repeaters have to be tested. In our family-owned watch company, the President does it."

Every Patek Philippe wristwatch with a minute repeater must pass a final test before it is handed over to its owner. First, our time and again, making these musical complications regularly test a single one has left the workshop before the President has listened to its chime. His grandfather did it this way before.

Today, this task falls to me. In the tranquility of my office, I listen to the chime of each watch to make sure it has the inevitable richness of sound that is the hallmark of a Patek Philippe minute repeater wristwatch.

Of course, in a family-owned watch company, this personal involvement in the craft of watch making is business as usual. And this determination to protect the integrity of our watches is now considered by the Patek Philippe Seal.

This tradition of horological excellence goes beyond any existing standards of the Swiss watch industry and, uniquely, applies to the completely assembled watch. Most importantly, it is evidence that we will never compromise the quality of our watches and that the risk of quality will always be personal and corporate.
